Introduction

The Museum of Early Southern Decorative Arts (MESDA) is unique among institutions of its kind because it freely makes available to the public one of its most treasured assets. This singular museum grants access to something often viewed as more valuable than the most celebrated objects in its collection. MESDA generously allows, and encourages, the public to utilize the vast sum of its research findings in the field of decorative arts and material culture of the early South.

Public dissemination of the information and data collected, recorded, and quantified by the museum's research staff has been a primary role of MESDA from its beginning. Thirty-five years after Frank L. Horton and his mother, Theo L. Taliaferro, fulfilled their dream of establishing a museum to collect, interpret, exhibit, and research early southern decorative arts, MESDA has become the quintessential center of its field.

Mr. Horton conceived the research component of MESDA as a tool to interpret and strengthen the museum's collection. When MESDA opened its doors in 1965, not a single object in its collection could be confidently attributed to a specific maker. The research program set in motion over three decades ago has enabled the positive attribution of thousands of objects and brought to light just as many signed works in every discipline. Through focused tenacity and a genuine love for the work, the MESDA research staff has located and recorded over 20,000 examples of southern material culture and collected documentary information for more than 75,000 artisans working in the South prior to 1821.

This five-issue set of the Journal of Early Southern Decorative Arts provides only a glimpse of the enormous wealth of information held in the MESDA Research Center. As unfathomable as the totality of MESDA's research may be, there is importance in recognizing the achievement and effort undertaken by the museum. Thus, these five issues of the Journal may best be appreciated as a milestone, a landmark, in MESDA's continuing journey through North America's early South.

HISTORY OF THE MESDA RESEARCH PROGRAMS

The long-term research program at MESDA was designed by Frank L. Horton, Bradford L. Rauschenberg, and Carolyn J. Weekley to explore and document the heritage of decorative arts surviving in the South. The program had two elements: objects and artisans. The first element would locate and record surviving examples of early southern material culture. The second component entailed recording information about artisans gathered from primary research in public and private records of every county in the region recognized as the early South.

The problem of defining the early South was present before MESDA's existence. But with the creation of the museum, the need for a concrete definition became apparent. A complete definition required both geographical and cultural considerations. For instance, the Deep South states—Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi—were excluded because they are geographically too far away from the southeastern seaboard to be properly studied by MESDA. Also, the fragmentation or lessening of the material culture data found in the Deep South makes the region extremely difficult to interpret. Since MESDA's fundamental interest lies in unique southern styles exhibited in decorative arts and material culture—furniture, metalware, textiles, ceramics, painting, and graphics—any objects made after 1821 were excluded from the museum's definition of the early South. This decision was based on the trend of regional characteristics giving way to more homogeneous, nationally based designs after the 1820s due to advances in manufacturing, transportation, commerce, and communication. Nineteenth-century innovations and growth brought about by the mechanization of the Industrial Revolution all but eliminated the regional traits that defined regional craftsmanship.

Thus, for MESDA's purposes, it was determined that the decorative arts of the early South encompassed all works created before 1821 in the states of Maryland, Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Tennessee, and Kentucky. Furthermore, the area defined by MESDA was broken into three culturally distinct units: Chesapeake, Low Country, and Backcountry.

This first problem hurdled, MESDA was ready to push ahead with the research. The first program, designed to locate and record examples of early southern decorative arts, was begun in June 1972 with the help of grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities and the National Endowment for the Arts as well as support from the MESDA Endowment. The field research continued until 1985 with MESDA representatives visiting over 11,000 homes and documenting more than 15,000 objects. With Frank Horton as the lead investigator, the field program continuously employed four field representatives and surveyed objects from seven states. Once concluded, the data collected through the program was organized and compiled to create the Catalogue of Surviving Early Southern Decorative Arts Prior to 1821.

The second program, with the goal of gathering information about artisans through primary research in public and private records of every county in the early South, was also begun in 1972. The program scoured newspapers, city directories, court records, and private papers in search of information pertaining to artisans and craftsmen. The overriding purpose of this program was to collect and make accessible data on the lives and working habits of southern artisans working prior to 1821. One of the much anticipated goals of the research was a better understanding of the migration of craftsmen in the South. The records for the artisans vary from simple entries to more complex listings describing the work of the artisan, land transactions, vital statistics, products produced, how the products were sold, and design sources, to name just a few examples. This program continues today, employing about a half dozen researchers, and has collected information on over 75,000 artisans working in approximately 100 trades. The resulting data from this program has been compiled into the Index of Early Southern Artists and Artisans.

Both the Catalogue of Surviving Early Southern Decorative Arts Prior to 1821 and Index of Early Southern Artists and Artisans are housed in the MESDA Research Center and available to the public. These resources have been enthusiastically received by decorative arts scholars and hundreds of visiting researchers use them each year. The information gleaned from these files has been used to plan several major museum exhibits, provide new material for publications—including the Journal of Early Southern Decorative Arts and the books of MESDA's Frank L. Horton Series—and, most importantly, heighten the awareness and scholarship of southern decorative arts in publications, exhibitions, and curricula around the world. These are very impressive achievements for a thirty-five-year-old museum championing the previously neglected field of early southern decorative arts.

Looking to the future, research at MESDA continues in many forms. Neither the Catalogue nor the Index is ever truly complete. New findings and corrections are a constant that keep the staff in the Research Center busy. There is an abundance of documentary data already acquired by MESDA that has not yet been read, interpreted, and systematically integrated into the Research Center's files. Analysis and evaluation of this raw material will take years of hard work.

Further research needs to be conducted to bring the huge amount of information MESDA has gathered about the coastal areas in proportion to the meager data possessed about the Backcountry. Shop accounts and store records in the Backcountry need to be located and studied in order to ascertain the working habits and practices of artisans in this region. Primary documents about Backcountry artisans are difficult to locate due to the mostly rural setting of the region. Lacking large urban centers with well-maintained city or county records and attentive historical societies, important documentation about Backcountry artisans tends to come from the most unlikely sources, such as private collections and family libraries. Because of the difficulty in finding such data, the search for information on the ways Backcountry artisans lived and worked will continue for many years to come and any help in locating such material would be much appreciated by the dedicated researchers at MESDA.

CONTENT OF THE FIVE-ISSUE JOURNAL SET

This five-issue Journal set is intended to be used as a research tool, but also stands as a hallmark to the work done thus far by MESDA researchers. Since there will never truly be an end to the collection of information for the Index of Early Southern Artists and Artisans, MESDA feels that the material collected for the Index should, from time to time, be published to make the data available to researchers, Members of MESDA, and those generally interested in the decorative arts of the early South. Thus, this five-issue set is also intended to commemorate and document research completed to date.

In 1982, the Index was computerized and the subsequent database, albeit very rudimentary when compared to today's standards, was made available to researchers and libraries. In 1985, an updated Index was transferred to microfiche and distributed. The majority of the content found in these five Journal issues is yet another updated alphabetical list of artisans from the Index of Early Southern Artists and Artisans. The information included in these five books contains only a portion of the biographical information available for each artisan in the complete Index of Early Southern Artists and Artisans. This five-issue Journal set does, however, present every artist and artisan included in the Index and provides the first published update of the Index since 1985.

Publication of these five issues was made possible by the difficult, sometimes trying but much needed, transfer of MESDA data files to a more centralized computer program known as Re:discovery. In addition to making this publication possible, Re:discovery has expanded and strengthened the sorting capabilities and added many useful features to the complete Index database available at MESDA, allowing for faster, more thorough research to be conducted with less effort.

The entries included in this Journal set are listed in alphabetical order by their last name. There was much discussion concerning how to best present the entries. The two obvious organizational methods were alphabetical and geographical. We chose an alphabetical listing of entries to better show the migration of craftsmen in the South that, by inference, could provide clues to the migration of the designs and working methods used by southern artisans. Since artisans that were found to be working in two or more geographic locations are listed in each location and given separate MESDA identification numbers, it would be impossible to track the migration of artisans without knowing exactly in which areas the artisans worked during their careers. By listing the entries alphabetically, craftsmen that worked in more than one geographic region will have consecutive, multiple listings, allowing for easier tracking of migrating craftsmen from one location to the next.

Each entry gives the artisan's full name, the geographic region in which the artisan was active, the date(s) the artisan was active, and the trade(s) in which the artisan worked. Preceding each name is the artisan's MESDA identification number. Lastly, an asterisk appears after the MESDA identification number if MESDA possesses a photographic image of work produced by the artisan.

Also included in this Journal set is a bibliography providing a list of primary and secondary sources referenced by MESDA while compiling the Index. Inclusion of this bibliography is extremely useful to those who are scouring newspapers and other historical records for information about specific artisans because it will prevent duplicate or redundant research of sources. The bibliography also shows researchers the sources and geographical areas that MESDA has not yet covered, aiding scholars in determination of new topics and areas of study.

COMPUTERIZATION AND SEARCH ENGINES OF THE INDEX

In this age of electronic information and computer technology, we would be remiss not to take advantage of the benefits that a computer-based search engine offers researchers. To that end, we are currently developing a limited Web-based search engine of the Index that will be available to Members through MESDA's Web site. This search engine will enable multiple searches and cross-referencing based on the six fields of information given for each artisan in the JESDA set. A researcher accessing the search engine would be able to tailor a search of the Index to collect, for example, all entries containing silversmiths working in Virginia from 1780–1800. Information on this Web-based search engine and how to access it will be made available to Members as the project of creating the program nears completion.

HOW TO USE THE FIVE-ISSUE JOURNAL SET

The information contained in this set can be used in many ways. First and foremost, this material allows a researcher access to documented information about artisans of the early South. In the case that a person possesses a signed object, a quick referencing of this set will quickly and easily add knowledge of the attributed artisan. If the researcher desires more information about a particular artisan than what is presented in this listing, the MESDA identification number for the artisan can be referenced and, by visiting MESDA's Research Center, the researcher is led directly to the complete file for the artisan containing comprehensive data and images of their work (if available).

Those who are unable to visit the MESDA Research Center can use this five-issue set as an introduction to the vast quantity of research compiled by MESDA in the complete Index of Early Southern Artists and Artisans and as a means for the museum to establish contact with scholars whose work might benefit from the primary research being done at MESDA.

The data included in these five Journal issues is columnar in form and, as previously stated, presented as an alphabetical listing by last name of the artisan including the geographic region in which the artisan was active, the date(s) the artisan was active, the trade(s) in which the artisan worked, the artisan's MESDA identification number, and an asterisk if MESDA possesses a photographic image of work produced by the artisan.

Names of apprentices are accompanied by the names of their masters (in capital letters) and "apprentice" will appear after the trade in the occupation field. As already explained, if artists have been found working in two or more locations, they are listed in each, with separate MESDA identification numbers. Caution must, however, be used when identifying migrating craftsmen. When names appear twice, they may or may not represent the same person; to conclude that two listings of the same name do indeed refer to the same person in different regions is a judgment to be made by the researcher based on all the information available.

The dates included represent the range of dates found in documents concerning the artisans in those locations. As MESDA research continues, the date ranges change frequently as new information is added to artisan's files.

The trades listed may contain several occupations that the artisan appears to have followed, based on the documented evidence examined. Normally, the trades artisans worked in are related in some way.

Users of the information contained here may note immediately that it includes names of many artisans who did not live in the South as described by MESDA. In fact, some artisans listed here did not live in the South at all. Artists living and working outside the South are included to provide clues to the migration of craftsmen into the South as defined by MESDA (and—as stated earlier—by inference, the migration of their designs and working methods). Most of these non-southern artisans were added to the Index when MESDA researchers examined all known American city directories dating prior to 1821. Other non-southern artists have been found mentioned in southern newspapers or other southern sources.

Contacting the MESDA Research Center

Researchers may request copies of specific artisan files contained in the Index of Early Southern Artists and Artisans by contacting MESDA, using the identification number assigned to each artist as a guide. Every request must include the artisan's name and the corresponding identification number. It is helpful if researchers also include brief explanations or descriptions of their projects and the types of information needed. Concise explanations by researchers of their fields of interest or study topics enable MESDA staff to more thoroughly understand the types of material sought and may enable the Research Center to pinpoint information or documents that researchers did not know the museum possessed (such as archaeological records, trade advertisements, wills, etc.). Photocopies of the file in the Index will be sent to researchers by mail. Files will contain a bibliographical reference so researchers may refer to original documents when desired.

Requests for information from the complete Index may be submitted by writing to:

MESDA Research Center
PO Box 10310
Winston-Salem, NC 27108-0310

Fees will be charged to cover computer time and copying services. Researchers requesting consultation with MESDA staff members may write the Research Center. When a research problem becomes too time-consuming to be undertaken by the MESDA staff, a private researcher will be recommended.

CAUTIONS AND LIMITATIONS

Because the information presented in these five issues comes from the complete Index of Early Southern Artists and Artisans, the limitations of the Index are inherently passed onto users of this Journal set. For purposes of ease of understanding, the term Index should be understood by readers to mean both the Index of Early Southern Artists and Artisans and the material presented in this five-issue Journal set.

Users need to be aware that the Index contains information from documents read by MESDA researchers only (see the bibliography included in this Journal set). Consultation of the bibliography is strongly urged to avoid duplication of research and indication of primary sources not referenced by MESDA researchers.

Researchers wishing to access the complete Index or use the Web-based search engine must be wary of certain limitations. For example, the most descriptive information in the Index usually is derived from newspaper advertisements in which the artisan is describing to the public services offered. In many parts of the South, however, no newspapers existed prior to 1821; public records have proved to be the most important source of data for times and places where newspapers were not published. Furthermore, some public records identify persons by their occupations, but most do not. Thus, MESDA researchers have found it necessary to utilize a variety of methods in determining trades. These include, for example, record of payment for a specific type of work or a profile of tools occurring in an estate inventory.

It is likely that the listing of artists presented in the Index contains names of individuals who actually were not artisans, but rather owned the services of skilled enslaved people or indentured servants. These owners of skilled workers entered the Index because they were found in records as being paid for services performed by craftsmen.

All indentured servants and enslaved individuals who can be identified as artisans are included in the Index. Surnames of enslaved persons are listed in the Index when a surname has been documented. When the surname of an enslaved person is not known, only their first name is listed.

Researchers must consider allied trades when using the Index or requesting information from MESDA. Workmen frequently combined related trades and many trades were multi-faceted. A gunsmith, for example, in addition to weaponry, might have offered the products of a brassfounder, blacksmith, or locksmith. Whenever the documentation provides evidence of activity in secondary or related fields, the data for the artist's file has been entered accordingly.

The nomenclature for some occupations has changed with time and varied considerably from region to region. Certain terms, such as "goldsmith," have become archaic; all goldsmiths, silversmiths, and jewelers are identified in the Index as "silversmith." The term "chairmaker," in the absence of other information, might leave researchers wondering if the tradesmith made riding or sitting chairs; in this case the artisan is listed in the Index as a "chairmaker, unspecified." When artisans are found being paid for making coffins, they are arbitrarily listed as "carpenter" unless there is other information linking them to cabinetmaking. A "joiner" in MESDA's early South could be either a cabinetmaker (shop joiner) or a carpenter (house joiner); if a distinction cannot be made, the term "joiner, unspecified" is used.

The names of many apprentices appear in the Index, usually gleaned from court orders concerned with apprenticing orphans. Public record of apprenticeship of a youth whose father was living is rare, since the contract was a private one between the father and the master. Occasionally, these records are found among court records such as deed books. Records of orphan apprenticeships may be more useful to a study of society's methods of caring for the poor than to one of craft practices. It seems significant that relatively few of these apprentices later practiced the trades to which they were bound.

The Index includes names of artisans who appear to be the same person working in the same trade at different locations. As previously stated, it is left to the researcher's judgment to decide whether or not the multiple occurrence of a name refers to a single individual; research of other sources of information may be required. In some instances, evidence in MESDA's file is clear that two persons of the same name were working in the same trade at the same location; in these cases (I) and (II) have been added to their names. The use of "Sr." and "Jr." has been avoided since it is misleading; these terms did not necessarily indicate family relationship but simply the presence of two persons of the same name. Also, a man may have been called "Jr." at one time in his life and "Sr." at another.

Place names were a most perplexing problem in the design of the Index since boundaries rarely remained constant throughout the period being researched. Necessary standardization for a computerized database forced some arbitrary decisions, but wherever possible city and county names have been used. In some areas, parish names proved to be the most reliable alternative. Neighboring place names have been grouped under one term, such as "Norfolk Area," to include the cities and counties. For example:

NORFOLK AREA, VA
Norfolk Co., VA
Lower Norfolk Co., VA
Upper Norfolk Co., VA
Princess Anne Co., VA
Nansemond Co., VA
Norfolk, VA
Portsmouth, VA
Suffolk, VA

This is frequently the safest way to ensure that a list of craftsmen is complete, since many of the records were kept by court clerks, seemingly placing a person in a county or district who actually resided in a town.

District of Columbia names are grouped with Maryland, since DC was part of Maryland during most of the period MESDA researched. Alexandria, Virginia, which has changed identity from county to county and was once part of DC, is listed in Virginia. West Virginia was part of Virginia during all of the period researched by MESDA and is grouped with Virginia. Although Kentucky and Tennessee were parts of Virginia and North Carolina during most of the period, they became states in the 1790s and have been listed separately.

Other Index design problems were caused by the changing of town and county names; establishment of new towns and the demise of others; subdivision of governmental units as population expanded; occasional reorganization of governmental structure, resulting in the use of different geographical terminology; ownership of multiple dwellings; and the common practice employed by clerks of listing a person as a resident of any place that person owned property. Any of these problems may make it appear that artisans were in different locations when they may not have changed their residences.

Spelling of artisans' names is another problem that necessitated arbitrary decisions for filing purposes. A name may be found with several different spellings in a single document; and occasionally individuals used more than one spelling when signing their names. When this occurred, a choice has been made favoring the spelling most frequently used, or one that is common in the area. In those instances where individuals were consistent in spelling their own names, their spelling has been used. Users of the Index must remember to investigate all possible spellings, keeping in mind that early record keepers usually spelled phonetically.

Judgments made at MESDA concerning identification of artisans, their occupations, locations, and such, are based on documentation examined thus far, and change frequently as new evidence is discovered. These judgments are always subject to reinterpretation. Users of the Index should be careful to base their conclusions on evidence found in the documents themselves; the major contribution of MESDA research has been to locate these documents.

OCCUPATIONS OF INTEREST TO MESDA RESEARCH

The occupations listed below are of prime interest to MESDA research programs. Researchers must remember that the nomenclature of occupations has changed over the years. If a particular occupation is not listed, it may be grouped under another title.

When an individual in the Index is known to have been an apprentice in a particular occupation, the occupation title for their file will have "apprentice" in the description. For instance, if John Brown were an apprentice potter to the master potter James Green, then the name field in his file would read, "Brown, John (GREEN, JAMES)," and the occupation field would read "Potter apprentice."
